The Looking Glass: New Perspectives on Children's Literature invites submissions to all columns and sections for a special issue:

Harry Potter

Submission deadline: 15 August 2009

Publication date: September/October 2009

Critical, reflective, inquiring, and entertaining articles are welcomed for a special issue on J. K. Rowling's Harry Potter series. With the summer '09 release of the penultimate Harry Potter film, The Looking Glass will mirror popular and critical interest in this remarkable series with pieces that open inquiry into character, culture, and genre, but also that reflect individual experiences and ruminations, collective experiences sharing the books and films, and philosophical explorations that offer intersections of all facets of the Harry Potter experience.

The Looking Glass seeks submissions for all sections, with a special emphasis on:

- Jabberwocky, serious pieces, edited but not refereed
- Curiouser and Curiouser, short and entertaining pieces on any and all facets of children's literature.

Please visit our home page and submit online: www.the-looking-glass.net.

The Looking Glass invites submissions to the following:

- Alice's Academy, the scholarly refereed section (peer reviewed by at least two outside readers) (up to 6000 words)
- Emerging Voices and New Scholars, the section specifically designed for students and professors to work together in creating publishable scholarship (submissions must be made by a professor with the student's permission; up to 5000 words)
- Jabberwocky, serious pieces, edited but not refereed
- Curiouser and Curiouser, short and entertaining pieces on any and all facets of children's literature

Submissions on children's book publishing and technology and children's literature are also desired.

Please send all submissions to editor@the-looking-glass.net and state for which column submissions are intended. Submissions to Jabberwocky should be between 2500 and 4000 words and conform to current MLA citation standards. Submissions to Curiouser and Curiouser and any other columns must be between 1000 and 3000 words. Please check our contributors' page (address below) for special topics and deadlines. (See also the reverse.) The Looking Glass cannot accept simultaneous submissions or previously published articles. Published articles will be posted on the journal's website for at least three months, after which time they will be archived online. For more information, please see: <http://www.the-looking-glass.net/contribute.html>.
