During Giving Tuesday, we raised $2,490 (thank you!).

We hold $456,998.26 in total assets, including long-term investments of $231,586.69 and $49,406.34 in savings.

We received Project Muse royalties totaling $87,370 in 2019.

In 2019, we cleared $8,258.20 in profit.
Given the impact of Covid19 on national & state economies and on university budgets, the Treasurer does not recommend that we increase dues at this time;

The Treasurer encourages the renewal of memberships for those able to do so, and contributions to the organization on Giving Tuesday or at other times if at all possible, in order to help us continue to support grants, awards, virtual events, and the 2021 conference;

The Treasurer continues to recommend that members send their students directly to Project Muse to “click” on ChLA publication articles;
• The Treasurer continues to recommend that we work towards holding in reserve the equivalent of two years of operating expenses (approximately $500,000 in long-term savings) and refrain from adding new expenses until we reach this goal.

• Our savings has been essential in helping the organization weather the budgetary challenges created by the Covid19 pandemic.

• The Treasurer recommends that the Board work closely with Meeting Expectations (ME!) to develop a long-term investment strategy.

Each year the committee awards money for two grants, one for faculty and one for promising graduate students. Proposals are due by February 1st and the committee considers which ones will promise the greatest contribution to the field. Money is often awarded for travel to archives, collecting materials, or summer leave to conduct research.
The 2020 Hanna Beiter Graduate Student Research Grant in the amount of $1,000 was awarded to Jill Coste for a project titled “Representations of female rebellion in fairy tale retellings.” The committee congratulates Jill on her award.
The 2020 ChLA Faculty Research Grant in the amount of $1,500 each was awarded to Ralf Thiede for an archival visit to UC San Diego to research Theodor Geisel’s linguistic expertise and to Maya Socolowsky for her project Citizenship and Migration in U.S. Latino/a Children’s Literature, 1996-2018.

International Sponsorship Grant Description

The International Committee actively pursues the internationalization of North American children's literature research by broadening the spectrum of primary and secondary literature discussed at the annual meetings and in the publications of ChLA.
The ecological discourse of Korean children's literature has evolved from the Harmony with Nature, the Critique of Human Discontinuity, to the Global Life Idea, gradually expanding from early-stage, localized ecology to an ecological discourse that identifies the global environment as organic life. We are thrilled to award Jeung Hee Jang the Distinguished International Scholarship Grant, and Hyug Jun Kwon and Dafna Zur the International Travel Grant.

The Carol Gay Award, initiated in 1997 as an undergraduate essay award to honor one of ChLA’s founding members, Carol Gay of Youngstown State University in Ohio, by her husband, Tom Gay, is presented to a college undergraduate for an outstanding paper which contributes to the field of children's literature.
Sarah Selden does an excellent job of utilizing research to support her arguments, making strong connections to research/theory throughout her paper. Sarah has a powerful authorial voice and her paper was organized and reader-friendly without losing critical clout. It was a pleasure to read her work.
Katie Buhler for “Justice for All? Quilting a Literary Analysis of A Wreath for Emmett Till”, Sponsored by Anne Phillips, Kansas State University.

Katie Buhler’s paper was well-written, and her argument was thoroughly developed without “bogging down” the reader—a difficult task for many seasoned academics! Katie’s essay successfully navigates complex topics while maintaining, to quote one judge, a “true ease.” It was a pleasure to read her work.

The tone of Emily Hunsaker’s essay is scholarly without being dense (a challenge for many well-established scholars!) and her argument was supported well throughout her paper. The judges agreed that Emily’s paper moved nicely across a wide body of literature and encapsulated the agency (or lack thereof) in depictions of child climate activists. It was a pleasure to read her work.

Established by the ChLA Board in 2005 to parallel the Carol Gay Award for undergraduate essays, the Graduate Student Essay Awards recognize outstanding papers written on the graduate level in the field of children’s literature. They are considered annually and awarded as warranted. In 2008, the ChLA Board approved giving two separate awards each year, one for an essay written at the master’s level and one for an essay written at the doctoral level.
Dustin Vann for “‘Sissy that walk!’: RuPaul’s Drag Race and the Mainstreaming of Drag Culture in Children’s and Young Adult Literature”, sponsored by Anne Phillips, Kansas State University.

The judges appreciated Dustin’s essay facility with both picture book theory and queer theory. One evaluator noted, “In addition to close examination of those texts individually, the writer broadens the observations to larger issues involving the tension between fully embracing the power of gender performance and adhering to traditional (perhaps less transgressional) publishing structures/requirements.” Another judge credited the essay’s “excellent close readings,” and its well-written and engaging prose style.

The judges appreciated the essay’s argument for Lai’s book as a ground-breaking contribution to Asian-American literary theory, to Asian American poetry generally, and to children’s literature. One judge noted the effective the essay’s problematizing (while still appreciating) Gyo Fujikawa’s illustrations for A Child’s Book of Poems, which subtly contributed unmistakable racial identities to a book of all-white poetry. Another noted that, “By examining form, temporality, and child perception in the verse novel, the writer makes a convincing argument for the importance of this work. The attention to fine details of text is exemplary!” Another praised the essay’s thoughtful approach, noting the “Excellent analysis, very attuned to poetic language without losing sight of big picture.”

Sreemoyee Dasgupta for “Child Labour in India: Literature Representations along the Trajectory of Nation” (IRCL 11(2), December 2018, 160-72) adds significantly to existing understandings of childhood with its discussion of how childhood is conceptualized in the Global South. The literary discussion is complemented and supported by expansive historical context and cogent readings of contemporary policy.

The Article Award and Article Honor Award recognize outstanding articles focusing on a literary, historical, theoretical, or cultural examination of children's or young adult texts and culture. This year's award recognizes articles published in 2018.
Gretchen Papazian for, "Color Multiculturally: Twenty-First-Century Multicultural Picturebooks, Color(ing) Beyond the Lines," published in Children's Literature. Papazian's innovative article argues that picturebooks can be used “to expose, push against, and even break longstanding forms of social and political oppression,” including white supremacist, Western-bound, color-meaning conventions that have supported the idea of race, as well as racialized oppression, in the United States. One committee member notes that Papazian's article is both erudite -- brilliantly rooted in the scholarship around color and picturebooks -- and strikingly original.
Roberta Seelinger Trites and Sean Connors for, "Legend, Exceptionalism, and Genocidal Logic: A Framework for Reading Neoliberalism in YA Dystopias," published in The ALAN Review. Trites and Connors present a clear and vital critical framework for reading neoliberalism in young adult dystopias and other texts for adolescents and highlight a series of questions that readers can ask of young adult dystopias in the service of determining whether they reflect, or resist, neoliberal ideals. One committee member noted that Connors and Trites raise crucial questions about contemporary YA literature that are applicable far beyond the genre of YA dystopias.

Awarded annually by the Children's Literature Association to recognize the contribution of outstanding collections of essays to children's literature scholarship and criticism.
Growing Up Asian American in Young Adult Fiction, edited by Ymitri Mathison, has received this year’s award for the breadth of issues and the range of Asian American literatures covered. Each essay, well-researched and beautifully written, draws necessary attention to the vibrancy of Asian American literatures for young people as well as some of deep nuances behind its themes, traditions, and cultures. We are confident this collection will stand as a touchstone in the field, inspiring research and teaching for years to come.
In The Victorian Era in Twenty-First Century Children’s and Adolescent Literature and Culture, edited by Sarah K. Day and Sonya Sawyer Fritz, contributors offer rich case studies in not only the enduring legacy of Victorian literature on contemporary youth culture, but the ways in which contemporary authors use the Victorian context to work through social and cultural anxieties today. In so doing, the scholars examine a range of texts from an equally diverse set of approaches to consider how history informs literary analysis as well as how literature mobilizes history.

Awarded annually by the Children's Literature Association to recognize outstanding book-length contributions to children's literature scholarship and criticism.
This year’s book Award winner is Jules Gill-Peterson’s Histories of the Transgender Child. Gill-Peterson’s book engages with the archive of trans-childhood, race, and medicine to restore a historiography that denies the “newness” of trans-childhood and insists on enfranchisement and personhood. Committee readers enthusiastically voted this book to the top award, declaring it necessary, persuasive, impassioned, thought-provoking in the way it questions the "plasticity of childhood" and how children appear in the historical record.
The 2020 Honor Award goes to Susan E. Honeyman’s Perils of Protection: Shipwrecks, Orphans, and Children’s Rights. Honeyman traces the historic material roots of protectionism, juxtaposing that with child participation, exploring the misperception that an enfranchisement of child rights infringes on parental rights. The book award committee is pleased to honor Honeyman’s ambitious study, which they declare challenging, sophisticated, innovative, and compelling.

The Anne Devereaux Jordan Award Committee is pleased to announce that this year’s award goes to Peter Hunt. The author or editor of three dozen books, hundreds of articles, reviews, and editorials, and frequent guest lecturer at universities and conferences, Professor Hunt has had an exceptional influence on the profession. His work on narrative theory’s intersection with children’s literature was important in the 1980s, and since then he has done a great deal to theorize, challenge, and expand the academic study of children’s literature. He coined the term “childist criticism,” arguing the need to appreciate, understand, and value the perspectives of children. His books have been translated into nine languages, including Greek, Arabic, and Chinese, and he has served the field through his editorial work, including editing and annotating several classic works of children’s literature. His scholarship and service have already been honored with the Distinguished Scholarship Award from the International Society for the Fantastic in the Arts (in 1995) and the Brothers Grimm Award for services to children’s literature, from the International Institute for Children’s Literature in Osaka (in 2003).

Phoenix Book Award
Description

The Children's Literature Association Phoenix Award recognizes books of exceptional literary merit. First presented in 1985, it is given to the author, or the estate of the author, of a book for children first published twenty years earlier that did not win a major award at the time of its publication but which, from the perspective of time, is deemed worthy of special attention. Since 1989, honor books have also been named.
Many Stones is a book about the weight of grief and the weight of history. Coman’s writing offers nuanced insights into a vexed father-daughter relationship in the painful aftermath of the murder of Berry’s older sister. The novel explores South Africa’s ongoing racism and poverty, legacy of its past, and hopes for a healing future, while always keeping the focus on Berry’s struggles to have her own moments of “truth and reconciliation.”

Once again Walter Dean Myers honors Harlem in this collection that interweaves the voices and tones of a diverse and historic community. Throughout, we meet a cast of characters, from young to very old as they face challenges, celebrate triumphs, and care for each other. Myers crafts a neighborhood epic – heartbreaking and funny – in which each voice is a crucial part of 145th Street.

Finding Grace by Alyssa Brugman

As they say in Australia, this YA novel is “a goer.” Narrated by 18-year-old Rachel, Finding Grace raises the hardest questions: How do people manage tragedy? How do they continue after devastating loss? When Mr. Preston, a rich school supporter and businessman, offers Rachel a generously compensated job as caretaker for Grace, who lives with brain damage after an accident, Rachel accepts in the spirit of “what I know.” This ironic motif not only shapes her learning about her own ignorance; it also balances the discovery that Grace, who cannot speak or share thoughts, may become her best teacher. This detective tale skillfully pulls Rachel into Grace’s life even as Rachel begins her own independent adulthood. By finding the grace to realize she does not know as much about life as she thought she did, Rachel stole our hearts and made us laugh out loud. We especially loved the question Rachel gets asked: “What are you going to do?” and the spiritual wisdom that follows: “Sometimes I just want to scream, ‘I’m just trying to finish what I’m doing now!’”

Whale Talk by Cris Crutcher

This YA novel cuts to the chase in a truth-telling voice that makes change believable: “Whales don’t edit. . . if they think it, they say it, and if you are a whale, in a short amount of time you know exactly what it is to be you.” Narrator T. J. Jones is a racially-mixed upperclassman and a talented athlete who eschews school sports because he despises jock culture. When T.J. witnesses fellow student Chris Coughlin being bullied by football players for wearing his deceased older brother’s letter jacket, T.J. takes Chris under his wing. But he doesn’t stop there; T.J. recruits an unlikely swim team, “The Mermen,” that enables Chris and the other misfits who make up the Mermen to win letter jackets of their own. Like “The Loneliness of the Long-Distance Runner,” this heart-wrenching, humorous story celebrates what athletics can be even as it critiques their corruption by adults who use high school sports for their own gratification. At every Mermen practice, as the characters learn the power of relationships and develop self-confidence in their undersized pool, readers share the sadness and triumph of these sweet, deep, funny underdogs. T.J.’s anger at bullies and racists gradually matures, but does not dissipate. Not many adolescent males tell their stories of pain and patience, self-doubt and confidence so openly.
In Any Small Goodness, a novella that begins and ends with a loving Mexican American family, Arturo’s father tells him “When no eyes are upon him, that is a person’s true test.” Tony Johnston crafts a world in which Arturo learns from his gentle parents and his lime-loving abuela that community is within our grasp to create. The small goodnesses that Arturo sees include the elderly neighbor who spends the night in a tree with the cat he tries to save; the NBA player who trusts the school to keep his fame quiet as he volunteers to coach basketball; and the school librarian who embraces not just her child patrons but their families too. Arturo and his family weather violence and loss with love, strength, and determination. Ultimately, Arturo’s friends resist the pull of gangs, family instability, and attempts to erase their heritage by learning to focus on the small goodness around them.

The Children's Literature Association Phoenix Picture Book Award recognizes an exemplary picture book that conveys its story (whether fact or fiction) through the synergy between pictures and text, or through pictures alone if there is no text. Strangeness and melancholy dominate Tan’s story about a lost, anthropomorphized thing and the narrator’s quest to find where it belongs, emphasizing the rarity of connection and the challenges of resisting conformity and supporting the seemingly invisible among us.
